When I was young, I didn't think about the things I put online. I was only interested in having a laugh and sharing photos and comments with my friends. I didn't care who saw the things I posted but, after I started working, I realized that my online identity could have an effect on my career, so I decided to make it better.

First, I searched for my name on a search engine. It was a strange thing to do but it was useful. Some of the photos which appeared were surprising. The worst one was of me wearing a pair of shorts at the beach. Oh dear! it wasn't the first thing I wanted people to see when they reached for me. Next, I compared all my social network profiles. It's better to present yourself in the same way on all social networks. It's easier for people to find you. After that, I asked my mom to take a new profile photo of me. I decided to smile at the camera and look relaxed. Finally, I wrote a short biography. I started by saying where I work, then I mentioned my other interests. I want to show that I'm keen on lots of different things and I think I succeeded.

So, if you want to improve your online identity, try these things. They worked for me and they will hopefully work for you too.
